

Future Tense

Some people assume that if God doesn't know everything, He's not God. Well, I agree. By definition, if something is knowable, then God will know it. But also, by definition, if something is not knowable, God will not know it. God "knows" what's unknowable in the true sense that He doesn't know it. The future is not knowable simply because, once again by definition, it hasn't happened yet and there is literally nothing to know. Now the future is predictable, and the smarter you are the better you can predict it, and the more powerful you are, the better you can manipulate it. God is both smart and powerful. The future is in good hands.
